

Harry Rockland Miller

Harry Rockland-Miller, PhD recently retired from the University of Massachusetts Amherst where he was the Director of the Center for Counseling and Psychological Health, and served as a core member of the Student Affairs and Campus Life Leadership team. For 22 years he led a multidisciplinary university clinic providing short-term psychotherapies, psychopharmacological services, community consultation, training and 24-hour crisis services. For 16 of those years he also served as Associate Director of the University Health Services. As a key player in the evolution of a coordinated campus crisis response, he initiated or co-initiated many of the key response structures now in place on campus. Rockland-Miller is a national trainer, presenter and consultant in areas including college mental health, clinical triage, suicide prevention and mental health care delivery. Other clinical interests include crisis intervention, brief therapy and hospital-based treatment. He was a two-time recipient and Principal Investigator for a Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administrator grant providing suicide prevention training on the UMass Amherst campus. He also is a trainer with the American Association of Suicidology, teaching the Recognizing and Responding to Suicide Risk course nationally. Most recently, Rockland-Miller was awarded the Association of University and College Counseling Center Directors' (AUCCCD) Lifetime Achievement Award in recognition of his contribution to campus mental health "at the highest national levels." Prior to joining the university, he worked in mobile and hospital crisis intervention and inpatient psychiatry settings.
